Founder of Flora Mission Accused of Courting Widow Schott.

He Thinks Cabinet Photographs Are Cheaper Than Lawyers.

LONG ISLAND CITY, L. I., March 18.—Joseph Stearing, until recently was the superintendent of the Sunday-school of Trinity Methodist Church, at the corner of Crescent street and Grand avenue, of which Rev. W. S. Crammer is pastor.

After the death of his daughter, Flora, a year ago, he established the Flora Mission, on Fulton street, in her memory, and divided his time in conducting this mission and looking after the Sunday-school of the Trinity Church.

Mrs. School, a prepossessing widow, who is a member of Trinity Church, recently told the pastor that some time ago Stearing began to pay her marked attentions and gave her a ring and a photograph of himself, as well as that of a woman which he said was his dead wife, Mrs. Schott says that Stearing finally proposed to her. She told him that she could not marry him until she knew more about him. He told her according to whom he was and would marry her as soon as the dead year was up.

One evening recently she went to the Flora Mission to see Mr. Stearing, and at the door when she inquired for Mr. Stearing, this woman, who was his wife, replied:

"My husband is not here at present."

The two women then compared notes, and as a result Mrs. Schott went to Pastor Crammer, the pastor and officers of the church informed Stearing that he would either have to resign under a cloud or stand trial. He chose the former. The affair is still talk of in the neighborhood, which speculates as to what action Mrs. Schott will take. Mrs. Schott threatens to have Stearing whipped and even to inflict more serious punishment on him in case she gets the upper hand.

TOM YON.

You to-day deposited an elegant cabinet-sized photograph of himself with Chief Deputy Collector Allan Nichols, and in order to encourage his countrymen to do the same, he reproduced the picture in the "Evening World."

The applicant neglected to bring witness, however, and he therefore could not legally prosecute. When he left the office he promised to return with three credible friends who will be used to make affidavit that they are well acquainted with Tom Yon, and know that he is a good man.

Brooklyn, they will also be required to state when and how he arrived in the United States and swear that the photograph affixed to the application for a certificate of residence is a correct likeness of the applicant.

Tom Yon will speak English fairly well, and informed the department officials that he didn't know whether the law requiring Chinamen to register is constitutional or not. He said that if he got into trouble with the authorities, he isn't going to run the risk of being hauled out of the country, just for the sake of being contrary.

He said the bosses wanted him to fight and go to court, but that he was no fool and preferred to register and have his name on record.

Mr. Nichols hopes that, since Tom Yon has made the start, there will be other regular handbills of Mongolians into his office, and that he will get the disagreeable job of sending them back.

"There are about 1,000 Chinese in this district," he said, "and the deputies are getting all of them that they must register. The only thing that is keeping them back is the advice of the stockkeepers and others who are not registered regular."

He presented the affidavit of Juror John J. Kelly, who says that the jury was out all night and could not come to a decision.

Durham then proposed that each juror should be allowed to go home, and the amount he considered reasonable was no amount to be less than six cents, the several amounts to be added together, and the sum paid to the police officer to the cost of the jury.

This set one was followed out, and the verdict was $1.15.

The other jurors took the papers and reserved decision.

There are about four hundred of these men and nearly ten times as many laborers. The men have had no organization since the strike began, and the police have been unable to get any record of their names.
